Fabretto Teachers in Nicaragua - Chico's Short Documentary	In Nicaragua, over one quarter of teachers are not formally trained, with the majority of untrained teachers concentrated in rural communities (UNDP). Fabretto's teacher training programs respond directly to the need for skilled teachers in underserved areas. By empowering teachers through comprehensive training, Fabretto multiplies its impact and brings quality education to more children and youth in Nicaragua. We celebrate World Teacher's Day by honoring Chico, a teacher in Fabretto's primary enrichment program in the rural community Las Jaguas, Nicaragua. Chico was born with a congenital condition that affected the development of his arms and legs, but he has not allowed his physical limitations to hold him back. Despite facing physical limitations, Chico has taken advantage of all the education that Fabretto offered in rural Nicaragua, and now he gives back to his community as an enrichment teacher. The world needs more teachers like Chico

Saved by the bell!	Pupils are sometimes relieved to hear the school bell ring. As are teachers, from time to time. They are all familiar with the sensation of being 'saved by the bell'. For millions of children and youths, however, the bell will not ring today, even if it is their deepest wish. Studio Globo is an NGO that wants to contribute to intercultural and global education for children and youths, and to assist teachers and schools in achieving this. Studio Globo believes that education can be a driving force for development. Because of the firm belief that education is necessary to realise change, we want to celebrate the importance of good teachers and good education worldwide. Therefore, Studio Globo calls on all schools to participate in the symbolic action Saved by the Bell, a massive ringing of school bells on Friday, the 4th October 2013. This day is declared World Teachers' Day by UNESCO. When joining, your school will demonstrate its respect and appreciation for teachers' efforts worldwide. At the same time, your school shows its support for all children's rights to good education. Hopefully you too will join our initiative this year! For all questions and comments, contact savedbythebell@studioglobo.be

Seminario sobre educacion y futuro &amp; Educacion 2.0	Las nuevas tecnologías ofrecen una personalización que el antiguo sistema –todo el mundo leyendo a la vez el mismo libro– no era capaz de ofrecer”. Fue el escritor futurista Alvin Toffler el que pronunció dicha aseveración la pasada década, en una entrevista para la revista Edutopia. Toffler iba aún más allá y aseguraba que las formas de aprendizaje están condenadas a la evolución si no queremos que el hombre sea superado por la tecnología que él mismo ha creado. El autor de La revolución de la riqueza (Debate) apostaba por el “cierre de la escuela pública” en Estados Unidos y la proliferación de las charter schools (algo así como centros concertados) que, financiadas por dinero público, gozan de una amplia independencia en sus decisiones y programas educativos. Toffler enunciaba en su intervención algunas de las características que los expertos en educación aseguran que marcarán el futuro inmediato de la educación y que, obviamente, se topan a diario con muchos problemas logísticos y de financiación. Escuelas abiertas las 24 horas del día, compatibilidad del trabajo de los profesores con otras dedicaciones, programas educativos integrados en diferentes disciplinas, experiencias educativas personalizadas.... En definitiva, una flexibilidad que caracteriza a esas charter schools y que, señala el escritor, ya no responde, como en el pasado, a las necesidades de una sociedad industrial que había perfilado la escuela tradicional, sino a las de la sociedad del conocimiento en que vivimos. Innovación tecnológica y educación personalizada son seguramente los dos grandes pilares de la que será la educación del futuro, en la medida en que la situación financiera actual permita introducir estos cambios. Pero al mismo tiempo, se están produciendo ciertos movimientos de carácter mundial que cambiarán para siempre la forma que tenemos de adquirir conocimiento. Si no somos capaces de adaptarnos a los nuevos retos, alerta Toffler utilizando su
